Shop Small Saturday, city passports available

SPECIAL TO THE R-H

For some, Black Friday is as much a tradition as an early-Christmas shopping trip. However, most shoppers do not know about the extra day of deals available on Saturday.

In place since 2010, Small Business Saturday promotes commerce for brick and mortar shops in communities across the U.S. It also provides a chance for residents to reap the benefits of shopping locally by supporting our hometown business community.

Following the "Shop Small" and "Buy Local" trends taking over Kentucky, Greensburg is taking part in this new tradition and encouraging everyone to take advantage of great deals this holiday season by shopping local!

During Greensburg's annual celebration, Christmas on the Square, Saturday make sure to check out the great shops downtown and pick up your "Passport to Greensburg". Passports will be available for pick up at the information tent in front of the Old Courthouse starting at 3 p.m. Saturday.

Each page in the booklet lists a participating business. Once you pick up a passport, you will need to visit each business, get a stamp and turn in your completed passport to the information tent no later than 6 p.m.

The drawing for the winner will be held following the Christmas parade and the prize will include an assortment of items from the "Passport" businesses.

The "Passport to Greensburg" activity is meant to promote Green County's small businesses in conjunction with Small Business Saturday.

"During the holidays, many forget the unique gifts and shopping opportunities that exist in our own backyard," said Ivy Stanley, Community Development Coordinator for the City of Greensburg. "Participating in Small Business Saturday is a great way to get people in the doors of our local businesses. Last year almost every business on the square participated and we're hoping to have even more people actively visiting businesses and spending their money in Green County."

Five more toss hat in ring for 2014

BY TOM MILLS
NEWS EDITOR

Five more candidates, including a Green County resident seeking a seat in the Kentucky House of Representatives, entered the 2014 election campaign.

Three filed with the Kentucky Secretary of State's office. Richard Treitz (R), who ran in the 2012 special election to fill the seat vacated by now Commissioner of Agriculture James Comer, filed for the 24th District House seat.

Two incumbent judges — 11th Circuit Division II Judge Allan Ray Bertram and 11th District Division II Judge Connie Sullivan Phillips, both of Campbellsville, filed.

Two candidates filed for county office.

Fifth District Magistrate Charles Judd (R) was the only incumbent county official to file.

David Taylor (R), a longtime Jane Todd Crawford Hospital employee and part-time 911 Center dispatcher, filed for the office of coroner.

That brings the list of candidates from whom Green County voters will choose next year to 23.

Candidates for partisan offices which have a primary must file by Jan. 28. Nonpartisan and independent candidates, including

Bishop's longtime Red Cross support comes home with gift of life

If you would like to donate

The American Red Cross will have a Blood Drive Thursday, Dec. 5 from 11:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. at the Greensburg United Methodist Church on West Court Street.

When Ronnie Bishop began donating blood to the American Red Cross several years ago, he did it because he thought someday someone he knew may need it in a medical emergency.

Little did he imagine, though, that one day his generosity would be repaid in kind and blood donors would help save his life.

"When I gave blood for several years I never thought about me needing it," he said. "I thought someday my friends, my family, my grandkids may need this blood."

As assistant chief with the Summersville Fire Department he had seen countless accidents where victims needed transfusions, not to mention the demand for surgeries. One day, he said, he

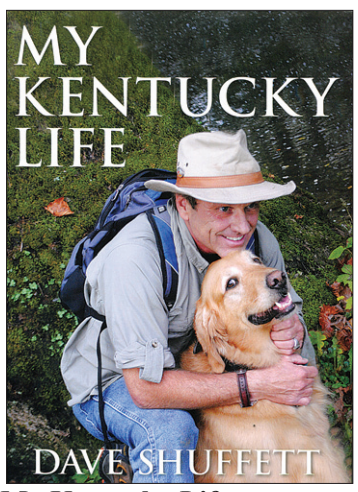
Shuffet's love affair with Kentucky comes alive in new book

BY TOM MILLS
NEWS EDITOR

Dave Shuffett's just released homage to Kentucky purports to be a photography book – and it does include spectacular photographs the television host and writer has taken in his 25 years crisscrossing the Commonwealth for television– but in reality it is the beginning of the tale of a man whose existence is defined by a sense of place and an infatuation with the state he wants to share with the world.

In "My Kentucky Life" Shuffett engages in an introspection of how place defines the individual. Part travelogue, part character study, part autobiography,



My Kentucky Life
by Dave Shuffett
106 pp. Butler Books. $23

the book is the first in what Shuffett promises to be a series, because the story he wants to share, like the history, diversity and natural wonder of the state, is too large for one volume.

Shuffett begins his journey with his beginnings, including how he acquired the nickname, "Mudcat," a name he wasn't fond of at first, but one that he has come to embrace. That sense of place he developed as a youngster, especially the raw nature of Kentucky he still finds so meaningful in his 50s, permeates the book.

"When I paddle a remote stream or walk in the deep woods, I experience a reconnection with old truths buried somewhere in all of us," he writes.

Shuffett's photographs and essays tell his personal story of people and places in the state including explanations of how some of Kentucky's most famous natural landmarks came to be. Animals feature prominently in the book, including the story behind the famous Bambi attack that aired in 1989 when he was host of Kentucky Educational Television's "Kentucky Afield."

The theme that runs through the book, which visits Kentucky's most recognizable natural wonders, spends time with people who are close to nature and briefly touches on history, culture and tragedy in the Commonwealth, is the love of Kentucky that defines Shuffett's existence.

A behind-the-scenes look at the production of "Kentucky Life," the program he presents, helps to tie the broad expanse of the Commonwealth, and the book, into a unifying whole as Shuffett seeks to share the state with which he is so enamored, and perhaps inspire some to reconnect with, or experience for the very first time, the wonder that is Kentucky.

Meet the author

For those searching for a unique Christmas gift with a local flair, Dave Shuffett will autograph copies of his new book "My Kentucky Life" at Longhunters Coffee and Tea Company Saturday during Greensburg's Christmas on the Square celebration from 3-7 p.m.

Letter

To the Editor:

So what is new? I can remember as a child going with my father to discuss a Subject with our magistrate. The first thing our magistrate would say is "We don't have any money." Now I can ask my current magistrate the same question and guess what... the answer is the same. Keep in mind that it is some 50 years later. The other question that my Dad would ask is "Why not?" That question was not answered at that time so the question remains "Why not?"

Now I strongly agree with the current fiscal court voting to do away with their benefits, but I don't put in the commendable category. Doing away with something that maybe they should not been receiving is not commendable. Sometimes situations require hard decision and Fiscal Court is required to make them with politics aside.

Now the "why not" question has been at least a 50 year making so it cannot be answered in a simple "sound bite" or two. Maybe there are a lot of other things that we pay for that we can no longer afford or shouldn't be paying.

Cost cutting is not the complete answer or neither a tax increase. Even if you raise taxes and don't change the way you do business it is just a matter of time that you are back in the same position as before. We need to look at the complete picture of how our local government does business and look at ways to change to make it more efficient. Personally, I think there are options available.

Last, but not least, is we, and I mean every one of us, should take more interest in our government. Most, if not all meetings are open to the public, Fiscal Court, City Council, Board of Education, etc. Those meetings should be packed with the public each and every time they meet. If we don't attend than we send the message that we don't hold them accountable. Every four years is too long for an evaluation.

Take part, if you are not registered, pick a party, register and take part in our system by voting. It's the right thing to do!

The more debate we have the more likely our elected leaders will make the right decisions; decisions that can move our county forward. If we can't survive today how can we or our children survive tomorrow.

Thank you,
Randy Davenport

Comer: On Thanksgiving Day, thank America's farmers

Notes from the Farm

Agriculture Commissioner James Comer

On Thanksgiving Day, many of us gather around a table and give thanks for our families, our friends, our jobs, and our health. This year, I hope you add to that list — and take a moment to thank a farmer.

The modern American farmer is a miracle of productivity and efficiency. The average American farmer feeds 155 people. American consumers spend, on average, about 10 percent of their income on food, the lowest percentage of any country.

The farmer accomplishes all this at enormous personal risk. The farmer is at the mercy of weather, politics, policy, trade issues, and any number of other big-picture factors that can affect the profitability of American agriculture. President John F. Kennedy, who had many good things to say about American farmers, put it well when he said: "The farmer is the only man in our economy who buys everything at retail, sells everything at wholesale, and pays the freight both ways."

On the individual level, farming is one of the most dangerous occupations in America, and the farmer faces the risk of injury from machinery, livestock, and many other hazards. An injury or illness can sideline a farmer for weeks or months, putting the farm family in danger of financial ruin.

The farmer faces all this physical and economic risk for very limited rewards. The U.S. Department of Agriculture says the farm's share of the American food dollar is about 15.5 cents.

And still American farmers carry on, day in and day out, providing us the safest, most abundant, and most affordable food supply in the world. They do it for the love of the land and the knowledge that they are following a noble calling.

When you bow your heads this Thanksgiving, please join me in saying a prayer for the American farmer.

Morning and Evening Prayer

Prayer can be unplanned and spontaneous, and sometimes the spontaneous prayer that flows out of an abundance of spirit is exactly the right prayer for the moment. But, more often than not, it is best to have a prayer routine. People who take their spirituality seriously usually have set times when they pray. Morning and Evening prayer are perhaps the most common times, but many also add a midday prayer. Praying shortly after arising in the morning and shortly before going to bed "bookends" our day with the sacred. It also helps to have a prayer book or some systematic way to pray. If you have never done this, invest in a prayer book and try it for a month or two. Most prayer regimens are fairly simple and need not be very time-consuming. Five or ten minutes each morning and evening will be time well-spent. So, perhaps you could check out your local Christian bookstore or ask your Pastor for guidance with this. You will be amazed at how regular prayer will improve the quality of your life.

– Christopher Simon

"Do not be anxious about anything, but in every situation, by prayer and petition, with thanksgiving, present your requests to God. And the peace of God, which transcends all understanding, will guard your hearts and your minds in Christ Jesus."

If you've been around long-time investors, you'll probably hear them say, ruefully, "If only I had gotten in on the ground floor of such-and-such computer or social media company, I'd be rich today." That may be true — but is it really relevant to anyone? Do you have to be an early investor of a spectacular company to achieve investment success?

Not really. Those early investors of the "next big thing" couldn't have fully anticipated the tremendous results enjoyed by those companies. But these investors all had one thing in common: They were ready, willing and able to look for good opportunities.

And that's what you need to do, too. Of course, you may never snag the next big thing, but that's not the point. If you're going to be a successful investor, you need to be diligent in your search for new opportunities. And these opportunities don't need to be brand-new to the financial markets — they can just be new to you.

For example, when you look at your investment portfolio, do you see the same types of investments? If you own mostly aggressive growth stocks, you have the possibility of gains — but, at the same time, you do risk taking losses, from which it may take years to recover. On the other hand, if you're "overloaded" with certificates of deposit (CDs) and Treasury bills, you may enjoy protection of principal but at the cost of growth potential, because these investments rarely offer much in the way of returns. In fact, they may not even keep up with inflation, which means that if you own too many of them, you will face purchasing-power risk. To avoid these problems, look for opportunities to broaden your holdings beyond just one or two asset classes.

Here's another way to take advantage of opportunities: Don't take a "time out" from investing. When markets are down, people's fears drive them to sell investments whose prices have declined — thereby immediately turning "paper" losses into real ones — rather than holding on to quality investment vehicles and waiting for the market to recover. But successful investors are often rewarded when they not only hold on to investments during declines but also increase their holdings by purchasing investments whose prices have fallen — or adding new shares to existing investments — thereby following the first rule of investing: Buy low. When the market rises again, these investors should see the value of their new investments, or the shares of their existing ones, increase in value. (Keep in mind, though, that, when investing in stocks, there are no guarantees; some stocks do lose value and may never recover.)

Instead of looking for that one great "hit" in the form of an early investment in a skyrocketing stock, you're better off by seeking good opportunities in the form of new investments that can broaden your existing portfolio or by adding additional shares, at good prices, to your existing investments. These moves are less glitzy and glamorous than getting in on the ground floor of the next big thing – but, in the long run, they may make you look pretty smart indeed.

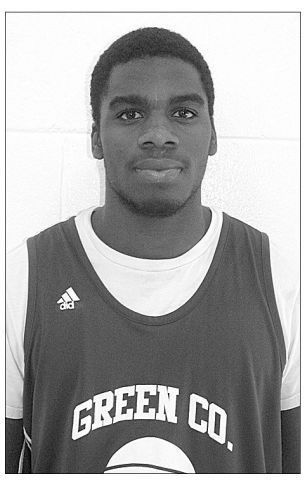
#24 Sam Moore
Senior
5'9" Guard

Sam has really worked hard this summer and fall to improve his game in all areas. He is in the point guard position and its his job to get the team in the right offenses and defenses. Sam is very quick and can get to the rim. His strength is also very valuable. He is an excellent defensive player who plays hard all the time. I look for Sam to have a good senior year.



#20 Kenny Banks
Senior
5'10" Guard

Kenny is very quick and can play above the rim. This summer he showed he can be outstanding defensive player and can also post up and score inside. Kenny's strength should be rebounding and this is an area where we need help. Kenny is a player who should get better and better as they year goes on. This young man has an outstanding attitude.

#3 Toby Estes
Senior
5'9" Guard

This is the first year Toby has played since his sophomore year and even though he has some catching up to do he has already shown he can be an outstanding shooter. He jumps extremely well and has decent quickness. I look for this young man to improve everyday as we go through the season and he should be a big part of the team.

Crawford is new Record-Herald sportswriter

By Tom Mills
News Editor

With the opening of high school basketball season, the Greensburg Record-Herald introduces a new sportswriter.

Nathan Crawford brings a wealth of experience to the position.

"My lifelong love affair with athletics as a player, coach and writer prepares me for being able to convey the excitement of Green County athletics," he said.

Nathan Crawford

Crawford played high school basketball and football in Toldeo, Ohio. He attended Cumberland College and then served in the United States air Force.

While in service he began coaching military basketball teams and when his enlistment ended he began a career as a high school teacher. He coached basketball, cross country, track and baseball in Kansas, Hawaii and Kentucky.

"I always envisioned being a football coach and had the privilege of coaching nearly everything but," he said. "As a coach and a player I can bring the understanding and insight into the chemistry that makes a team."

In 1990 he became a pastor, which eventually led him to Green County. Crawford has been the pastor at Summersville Baptist Church for nearly a year. He is familiar with Green County being a nephew-in-law of the late Green County Educator Mickey Cowherd.

Four years ago Crawford decided to make the ministry his career, but his attraction to sports kept calling to him. When presented the opportunity to write sports for the Record-Herald, he jumped at the chance.

He has previously written for sports magazines and web sites.

GCHS Dragon basketball determination is unchanging

Nathan Crawford
Sports Writer

Dragon Beat
Nathan Crawford

The days of fall continue to speed past inching us ever closer to winter. As the weather changes, so must the sports season. This continual movement forward is inevitable.

It has been stated that change is inevitable. While the merits of change are debated, there are things that are not debatable. For instance, Dragons are fiery. The athletes in the uniforms that carry that Dragon fire have and will change. Whether it is past or present athletes, there is one thing that does not change — Dragon Determination. That fiery determination of GCHS is the sum of all its parts — both present and past.

The seasonal climate indicates change, as do the athletic seasons. The gridiron gang and volleyball girls have given way to seasonal change. The transition from sport to sport is part of the change for the athlete, the student body and the community. At GCHS it is all about one thing — carrying and cheering on that Dragon Pride.

This year's group of GCHS athletes is proudly carrying the fiery torch of Dragon Determination.

With the passing of each season comes the next athletic adventure for the GCHS Dragons. Athletes are beginning to prepare themselves for this season's sport. Seasonal change also impacts the student body and the community, each eagerly awaiting the chance to cheer the efforts of the Dragons.

Change can sometimes be very difficult. Sometimes previous season goals and aspirations do not fully materialize. This leaves a longing, even an ache, deep within the heart. Just like the seasonal changes march on – so must the Dragons. This is exactly what the winter sport athletes are preparing to do – valiantly march on with the torch of Dragon Determination.

When did Dragon Determination begin? Legend has it that it simply has always existed. There is one thing that is for sure — Dragon Determination is not merely a legend; it is legendary. With each passing season the fiery torch of the Dragons continues to burn hot and bright.

With this persistent chill in the air it could mean only one thing — it is time for the hardwood to heat up. The only way for this to happen is for the Dragons to diligently prepare themselves for winter sports. They must not live on past performances. They must strive to carry on the legend of the Dragon. They must prepare themselves for foes that will make every attempt to extinguish the flame of determination.

Want to knock off that seasonal chill? Come and see the determination of the fire breathing Dragons as they torch the hardwood. Those that will wear the Dragon basketball colors are encouraged to carry the flame. Those who will cheer are equally encouraged to keep fanning the flame.

Seasons come and seasons go, but the legendary fire of the Dragons continues to this very day. Regardless of the season or the era, it is undeniable there is an unchanging legendary determination to the Dragons.

CU working with Green County schools in robotics

By Austin Yates
CU Student Writer

When one thinks of Campbellsville University, "Robotics" isn't the first thing that comes to mind. Thanks to a recent partnership with Green County Area Technology Center, Campbellsville and Taylor County schools and Team Taylor County, a science fiction fantasy is becoming a reality for local high school students.

Campbellsville University's Technology Training Center II on Nancy Cox Drive in Campbellsville is housing a new Robotics course taught through the Green County Area Technology Center (formally known as the "Vocational School"). The class is being taught to high school students from Taylor County and Campbellsville High Schools. David Rauch of the Green County ATC will teach the class.

"I'm really surprised," Ron McMahan, executive director for Team Taylor County, said. The program doesn't just have students who are going straight into the workforce, but it is for students who are heading to college after graduation.

"Whether they are going to college or not, we are getting students ready for the workforce. The students in this program are top notch at what they do," McMahan said.

Students are also showing enthusiasm for the class as well. "Thanks to the currently enrolled students' enthusiasm, we now have eight-10 more students on a waiting list for the class. We're starting small but were hoping that the program will develop in the years to come."

Rauch said, "What kids are learning here is going to help them wherever they go after graduation."

"Computerengineering is what I want to do," Eric Lamer, a junior at Campbellsville High School, said. "Knowing the robotics helps with things like programing and coding. This class has helped better me with what I want to do with my life."

"I've enjoyed it," Austin Colvin, a sophomore from Taylor County High School, said. "It's been difficult, but it's been fun." Colvin has discovered, through the course, his skills in mechanics. "I'm more of mechanical type person…I'm wanting to be a disc rotor technician."

In previous years, vocational students would have to commute to the GCATC via bus during afternoon classes. "Students don't want to travel to Greensburg in a bus," John Chowning, vice president for church and external relations and executive assistant to the president, said.

"The local industry and schools want more students to be able to take certain training programs through Green County Area Technology Center," he said. "There's no money for such new centers by the state so were partnering to use the space in the Technology Center."

McMahan said the commute and high school class scheduling conflicts for students was the primary reason for a satellite location in Campbellsville.

One of the benefits of the class and other ones taught by GCATC is how it affects the local economy. "Area industries need more career ready workers trained in these programs. This creates a need for a facility in Campbellsville," Chowning said.

Michael Rodenberg, president of Murakami Manufacturing USA, said, "We need people in the area who know how to operate these kinds of machines. For these students, we want them to get excited about robotics because of its use in manufacturing and engineering."

After his visit to the Area Technology Center, Rodenberg and Murakami USA donated $90,000 in obsolete material to the program.

"After visiting the group and seeing what they could do, I could see how our parts we had could be used on their machines," he said.

Rodenberg said when their company understands the real needs, it allows them to contribute in a more practical way, such as donating equipment and components and their time to teach and inspire.

"We look forward to partnering with the school systems of Green County, Taylor County, Campbellsville and Campbellsville University is encouraging our students to develop their talents as well as working together to create opportunities in the future for local advanced and degreed technical education," he said.

The classes (much like the robots) are being built from the ground up and hope to get bigger and more expansive as time goes on.

"This will attract high school students and adults to the campus. Some other longer term partnerships could result from this as well," Chowning said.

Thanksgiving holiday is steeped in history, dependent on farmers

In the House

State Rep. Terry Mills

If Benjamin Franklin had had his way, it's possible that the centerpiece of most Thanksgiving meals this week would not be the turkey.

While he did not actually recommend it replace the eagle as a symbol of our nation, he did, in a letter to his daughter, believe that the turkey's qualities were more virtuous. He called it "a true original of America" and "a bird of courage."

It's possible that wild turkey was on the menu of that first Thanksgiving nearly 400 years ago, but some historians believe other fowl, such as ducks and geese, were more likely part of the feast shared by the Pilgrims and the Native Americans.

The one thing we know for sure is that it took some time for the holiday to settle into its current location on the calendar. President Washington called for a day of national Thanksgiving on Nov. 26, but the states began establishing their own dates in the years that followed.

In the mid-1800s, for example, our own Governor Robert Letcher actually moved the holiday back to Sept. 26.

It was President Lincoln who first established the modern holiday schedule, setting Thanksgiving as the last Thursday in November. In the 1940s, Congress clarified that it would always be on the fourth Thursday.

President Lincoln is believed to have started another tradition around this holiday: The "pardoning" of the turkey by the President, which in this case was at the request of his son. The ceremony as we know it today, though, only dates back to the 1980s.

It was during the late 1800s and early 1900s, meanwhile, that the regular practice of giving a turkey to the President's family during Thanksgiving began, thanks to a poultry farmer from Rhode Island; there is an account, however, that a turkey from Kentucky shared billing at the White House a century ago.

As we gather around the table this week, many of us may find ourselves reflecting on what we're thankful for.

To begin with, we can thank our farmers for their work in making sure that we have enough to eat. There are only a few states that have more farms than we do, and we have not one or two but 10 different types of crops and livestock that bring in at least $100 million a year.

Two important to our state – corn and soybeans – are seeing a remarkable turnaround when compared to last year's difficult growing season. Earlier this month, we learned that corn is on track to more than double last year's production here in the state, while soybeans will see their numbers go up by a third.

Another positive in our favor is our giving nature. A study released last year by the Chronicle of Philanthropy put Kentucky 15th among the states when it comes to charity.

While many of us will be eating at home this year, many others will be visiting our state resort parks, which offer a full meal between noon and 8 p.m. It's something to consider for those who may be looking for a new tradition or to take a break from hours spent in the kitchen.

Whatever is decided, please take a little extra time when travelling during what the U.S. Bureau of Transportation Statistics says is the busiest week of the year. When compared to a non-holiday period, the number of those travelling more than 50 miles away this week goes up by half.

On behalf of my family and the Kentucky House of Representatives, I hope you have a wonderful Thanksgiving, and that the upcoming holiday season is a positive one.

New deer harvest record set

SPECIAL TO THE R-H

Kentucky deer hunters set a harvest record of 101,076 deer during the 16-day modern gun deer season that concluded Sunday.

"As of Nov. 25, we are at 127,551 for our total season harvest according to telecheck, less than 4,000 from the record," said Tina Brunjes, deer and elk coordinator for the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources. "We had the second highest opening day harvest for modern gun deer season and the highest closing weekend on record.

"The data shows that more Kentucky hunters who go afield are successfully taking deer."

Be safe when using a generator

SPECIAL TO THE R-H

Many households run generators during a power outage and homeowners should take extra precautions to avoid injury.

Green County Emergency Management Director Bill Matney said gasoline or diesel fuel powered generators can produce potentially deadly levels of carbon monoxide and should be operated only in well-ventilated, covered, unheated areas – never inside. You should always practice extreme caution when using a generator to power your home.

Make sure the generator is listed by an independent testing organization, such as Underwriter's Laboratory. Protect the generator from exposure to rain, but under no circumstances should generators be used indoors, including a garage. Do not operate the generator near any open windows or doorways.

Before using a generator, make sure you have installed a carbon monoxide alarm near sleeping areas to alert you in the event of increased levels of CO in your home.

Never connect a generator to the home's electrical system. Plug what you want to power directly into the generator.

Matney also said everyone, regardless of where he or she lives, is urged to assemble an emergency supply kit.

Emergency preparedness officials with the U.S. Department of Homeland Security's Federal Emergency Management Agency (and the State of Kentucky have produced a list of essential items for families to consider when they pack supplies.

Emergency Supplies Checklist

Recommended supplies to include in a basic kit:

- One gallon of water per person per day for drinking and sanitation
- At least a three-day supply of non-perishable food
- Battery-powered radio and extra batteries
- Flashlight and extra batteries
- First aid kit including a three-day supply of prescription medications
- Whistle to signal for help
- Dust mask or cotton t-shirt to help filter the air
- Moist towelettes for sanitation
- Wrench or pliers to turn off utilities
- Can opener (non-electric)
- Plastic sheeting and duct tape to shelter-in-place
- Garbage bags and plastic ties for personal sanitation
- Sturdy shoes and extra clothing and blankets
- Three-day supply of pet food
- Cash

"Storing these items in a clean, large garbage can with wheels makes it easy to handle in the event of an emergency," Matney said. "Think about your family's unique needs. You may wish to pack diapers, infant formula, bottles, comfort items, books, paper, pens, and a deck of cards or other forms of entertainment. When you assemble your kit, consider putting together a spare kit for your car or your office."

What can you say to help someone with cancer?

BY NIKI BARR
PH.D

This year alone, 238,000 men will be diagnosed with new cases of prostate cancer, the most common incidence of the disease. More than 234,580 men and women will learn they have breast cancer, the second most common today, according to the National Cancer Institute.

All told, about 13.7 million Americans are living with cancer or a history of cancer.*

Chances are, you know one or more of them.

"Friends, family, coworkers – they can all play an important role in helping a cancer patient's recovery simply by providing emotional support," says pioneering cancer psychotherapist Dr. Niki Barr, author of "Emotional Wellness, The Other Half of Treating Cancer." (canceremotionalwellbeing.com).

After a diagnosis of cancer, people have a greater need for social support, which has been shown to influence health outcomes, according to a National Institutes of Health report. Of the nine types of social support, the report says emotional support is among the most important.

"Even if you're not among the person's closest friends or family, you can help far more than you imagine simply by being encouraging and supportive," says Barr, who works exclusively with cancer patients and their loved ones.

"I understand people don't always know what to say to someone who's just been diagnosed or is in the midst of treatments and yes, sometimes they do say the wrong thing," Barr says. "I remind my patients often to refuse to listen to cancer 'horror stories,' so please, don't tell those!"

While everyone is different, Barr says that she's found a few things her patients consistently say benefit them:

- Sometimes saying nothing at all says everything. If your friend or loved one wants to talk about her treatments, complain about his situation, or not talk at all, being a good listener or simply a quiet presence speaks volumes. When a person complains, many of us jump to "help" by suggesting solutions. That's likely not what your friend or loved one is looking for. As my patients have said time and time again, sometimes they just want to get it all off their chest. An empathetic listener is all the help they need.
- Make your offer of help specific. "Call me if you need anything at all," puts the burden on your loved one – who already carries a tremendous burden! Instead, you might offer to make dinner for her family on Wednesday night and ask what meal everyone enjoys. Or volunteer to drive him to his doctor appointment on Monday afternoon. This makes it easy for your friend to politely accept or decline your offer, and it ensures you provide the assistance you feel comfortable providing.
- Not sure what to talk about? Follow his lead. Some days, my patients want to talk only about their illness, the treatment they're undergoing, and how they feel. Other days, they want to talk about anything BUT cancer. We all have days when we're immersed in our own lives and other days when we want to be distracted – or to just feel normal.
- If you're not sure what to say, err on the side of being positive. a person who's going through what may be the most difficult, stressful event of their lives knows that you care, it makes a difference, Barr says.

"If you're truly at a loss for words, it never hurts to simply say, 'I'm thinking about you."

Library has special events scheduled in December

By Laura Johnson
Green Co. Public Library

The Green County Public Library has two special events coming in December.

The first is Grandpa Jones: Country Musician and Comic. Louis Marshall Jones (1913-1998), better known as Grandpa, was born in Henderson County. He had a career that lasted more than 60 years as a singer, banjo picker, and song writer. He gained major stardom in the beloved 1970s comedy show "Hee Haw" and was inducted into the Country Music Hall of Fame in 1978. On Dec. 5 from 5 to 6 p.m., relive the music and humor of Granada Jones, portrayed by Kentucky Chautauqua David Hurt.

The second event is A Kentuckian's Long Hard Road to Publication – and the Harder Road Beyond.

Kentucky author Eddie Price fulfilled a lifelong dream when his historical fiction novel, Widder's Landing, was published in September 2012. Writing the book consisted of five years traveling, interviews, research, and editing, but the work of publication still lay ahead of him. The presentation Dec. 12 from 5 to 6 p.m. will include Mr. Price's experiences: developing a Kentucky theme and voice, creating characters, and persisting in a rapidly changing business that challenges new writers.

Louis Marshall Jones

Both presentations are provided by the Green County Public Library and the Kentucky Humanities Council, a partner of Kentucky's Tourism, Arts and Heritage Council. Everyone is invited to attend these free events.

For more information contact the library at 932-7081.

Onset of cold weather brings flu complications

By Clevis Jeffries
Staff writer

With a possible flu season fast approaching, Dr. David Maddox from the Greensburg Clinic of TJ Health Partners, 603 Columbia Highway, presented valuable information to Rotary members Nov. 19 obtained from the website, www.uptodate.com.

Information was provided about flu symptoms, complications that might occur and flu treatment, including treating the symptoms and when to seek help.

Seasonal flu can vary from person-to-person, but symptoms, according to Dr. Maddox, may include fever (a temperature higher than 100 degrees Fahrenheit), chills, headache and muscle aches, fatigue, as well as the presence of a cough and sore throat.

Individuals with the flu usually have a fever for two to five days. Complications may occur in some people such as pneumonia. This is more likely to occur in young children, people over the age of 65, people who are in long-term care facilities and those with other illnesses such as diabetes or conditions affecting the heart or lungs. Pneumonia also is more common in people who have weakened immune systems, such as those who have had a transplant.

Flu shots are available at the primary care office, Dr. Maddox said, and is recommended for people ages six months and up and those who experience other medical problems.

"The best way to keep from contracting flu is to be immunized with the flu shot. The immunization helps keep individuals from catching the flu as well as spreading to your family and friends," he said.

Treatment needs to start within 48 hours of contracting the flu. Even though most people with the flu recover within one to two weeks without treatment, serious complications of the flu can occur.

Medical attention is needed if one has trouble breathing, has pain or pressure in the chest or stomach area, has signs of being dehydrated, feels confused, experiences constant vomiting or has a desire to continually take in fluids.

In children, medical help should be sought if the skin color becomes blue or purplish, by becoming so irritable as to not wanting to be held, having a lack of tears when crying, having a fever with a rash, or is not easily awaken.

To help treat the symptoms of the flu require rest, plenty of fluids, acetaminophen and aspirin. However, aspirin and medicines that include aspirin are not recommended for children under 18.

Cough medicines may not be helpful and the website does not recommend cough or cold medicine for children under six years of age.

The local office presently administers flu vaccinations and services both adults and children.

Future plans are to provide in-office x-rays and provide some medical specialties such as cardiology.

"My idea upon coming here was to use whatever resources are in the area," Dr. Maddox said.

Though the local office does some testing, it also schedules x-rays, MRI's, CAT scans and provides referral services to patients.

Bishop's blood generosity repaid in rare condition decided he would give because it's never known when it might be a need in their own home or for a close friend.

Once he started, he gave every time he was eligible.

"Every 56 days you get a notice that you are eligible to give again and I did," he said. "It is very important that people give."

In early August Bishop's strength started to fade. That was unacceptable to a man always on the go, and, he couldn't afford to be sick because the customers of his heating and air conditioning business expected him to respond whenever they had an emergency.

Three trips to Taylor Regional Hospital failed to diagnose the issue and he kept getting weaker. Normal hemoglobin levels for an adult man is 12-15. Bishop got down to a 6.2 and his heart would palpitate and he would have trouble breathing.

"I couldn't hold my weight up," he said. "I could tell it was in the bottom of my stomach but they couldn't find anything."

Doctors knew he was bleeding internally because blood loss had driven his hemoglobin count to less than half of what it should be.

It wasn't until he was sent the University of Louisville Hospital in late September that doctors discovered he had a rare condition where aneurisms in his small intestines were leaking.

After more than a week of tests with no results at UofL, Bishop said he was becoming resigned to his fate.

"I swallowed a camera, they tagged red blood cells and injected them back into me twice to tray and trace it, but it was in the small bowel and they couldn't see," he said. "I thought we were running out of things to try."

Doctors eventually performed an arteriogram through Bishop's groin and discovered the aneurysms.

I was awake and he had it up on a screen, but I didn't watch it," he said. "But when he began to find those leaking veins he began to fix them."

The surgeon, who said he had never seen a case as severe as Bishops', treated the aneurysms by packing tiny coils into the aneurysm to promote blood clotting and close off the aneurysm. Coils accomplish from the inside what a surgical clip would accomplish from the outside: they stop blood from flowing into the aneurysm but allow blood to flow freely through the normal arteries.

By the time Bishop went back to his hospital room, the bleeding was stopped, but he was kept in the hospital five more days to make sure.

"It was sort of unbelievable because I had been through all this and had to just take blood and take blood to keep me alive," he said.

Bishop said his strengthisreturningand he is working again.

"I try to do a little every day," he said. "I don't overdo it, but I try to keep moving."

He credits his faith, and the legion of people who kept him in their thoughts.

"Numbers of people prayed for me and the good Lord saw fit for me to come home," he said.

During his ordeal, Bishop was given 29 units of blood and he said without the donated blood he wouldn't be here.

In a moment of karma indicating he was being repaid for his years of donation, Bishop said his UofL Hospital room was located directly above the Red Cross headquarters.

"I told them one day they were going to have to run a hose up here, because they were packing it in me every day," he said. "There were all these bloodmobiles that scatter out all over the state and there I was on the seventh floor looking right at them."

He encourages people to become involved because you never know who you will help.

"It won't hurt 'em, and it's a good thing," he said. "It never bothered me and we need to give the gift. It's a good feeling to know that you may save somebody's life."

Green County native Ralph Pierce stood guard with his U.S. Army unit about 100 feet away from where President John F. Kennedy was laid to rest in Arlington National Cemetery Nov. 25, 1963.

Local man witnessed historic funeral

By Ralph Pierce
Special to the R-H

Our company arrived at Arlington before daybreak. We disembarked the buses and prepared to march to the grave site. I still remember the goose bumps I had the moment I realized this day was to be a part of our national history, and I was a part of it.

As our battalion commander led us through the cemetery I could hear the steel taps of his boots. I'm sure they could hear them clicking all the way to the Pentagon building.

The grave site was an awesome sight. There were grave markers as far as the eye could see.

We took our posts as cordon guards for what proved to be a very long day. Some people had been there all night just to be close to the grave site. It was our job to hold them back. We were assisted by secret service and the military police.

As people began to arrive later in the morning, I could hear in the far distance the first sound of drums. The goose bumps I had earlier were still there as the funeral procession started moving toward the cemetery.

I could hear the Scottish band. Those bagpipes, I can still hear them today. As the procession got closer, the old caisson that bore the casket of our fallen leader squeaked as it made its way across the 14th Street bridge that spans the Potomac and links the drive to the cemetery.

My post was at the base of the hill about 60 feet away from the disembarking point for the dignitaries and leaders of other countries that came to pay their respects.

They did not tell us to stand at attention so I was able to look around. I remember as the procession entered the cemetery seeing at the front the spirited rider less horse with boots turned backward in the stirrups, symbolizing a fallen leader. He was very hard to keep under control.

As they all got to the cemetery and started to unload, I saw that former presidents Eisenhower and Truman were in a limousine together. I saw actor Peter Lawford (Kennedy's brother-in-law), President Charles de Gaulle of France, the Shah of Iran…these figures are forever etched in my memory. Everyone who was anyone was there. I was more than a little nervous.

The family, Mrs. Kennedy, little John, Caroline, Teddy, Robert, and then President Johnson were escorted from their cars. I remember that moment like it was yesterday. I believe President Johnson was the tallest man I had ever seen. He was head and shoulders above everyone around him. "How are they going to protect him," I thought to myself.

The ceremony went on forever, it seemed. Fifty armed forces jets flew over, symbolizing the 50 states, then Air Force One came over, tipping the wings in a goodbye salute to our former commander-in-chief.

I know I was nervous because I remember Sgt. Larson coming down the line to inform us they were about to play Taps. After being in the Army for two years I couldn't think for a brief moment, for the life of me, what Taps was.

It was all over at dusk, as we were leaving to board the buses that would carry us back to the base, the silence that was like Midnight, was suddenly broken by the sound of 105mm howitzer canons. The percussion from those guns shook the very ground we walked on. I remember all the smoke that settled in the area from the 50 rounds going off.

I cannot describe the empty feeling I had. It was there, at that moment in history, when I realized to that to be the land of the free there is an awesome price that must be paid by some – that our country must also be the home of the brave.

The letters of commendation we received are mementoes we can keep, but the experience of being there at that moment in history is what I will never forget.

Ralph Pierce looks at a keepsake of his experience in 1963 standing guard at Arlington National Cemetery the day President John F. Kennedy was buried. He was about 60 feet from where dignitaries and leaders of nations arrived. He said those historic figures are forever etched in his memory.

Pierce stood guard day Kennedy was buried in Arlington

By Tom Mills
News editor

Ralph Pierce, who operates the Hole-In-One Café with his family, was 10 days away from getting out of the U.S. Army on Nov. 22, 1963.

He was stationed in Fort Belvoir, Va., with the 100th Engineers Company and was building a house on a truck for winter maneuvers for his comrade whose enlistments were not up. His sergeant came and told the men that President John F. Kennedy had been shot. Over the next two days, he watched with the rest of the country as preparations for a state funeral were made and foreign dignitaries gathered. Pierce said he thought about going into Washington, D.C. to see firsthand, but decide against it when he saw on television the masses of people flooding into the capitol.

Pierce couldn't escape history quite that easily, however. On Nov. 25 his unit was awakened at 5 a.m. and told to fall out in dress uniform. They were going to Arlington National Cemetery to serve as guards at the president's funeral. Pierce was positioned about 100 feet from the grave site and had a firsthand view of the historic event.

This is the story Pierce told the Record-Herald in 1983. On Monday, which was the 50th anniversary of that funeral, he said while he has reflected on a few details of that day over the years, he really can't improve on the story as he told it then.

Two Green Countians are receiving attention in statewide magazines this month.

Paul Dengel, a 2004 Green County High School graduate, is featured on the cover of the November issue of Kentucky Monthly for a story on military veterans who are using agriculture to transition to civilian life through the Growing Warriors Project.

Started in 2012, Growing Warriors is a program to help veteran families with the skills, tools, and supplies needed to grow high quality naturally grown produce.

Dengel, who moved to Green County from Wisconsin with is family when he was nine, joined the United States Air Force in 2006. After his discharge in 2010, he went to the University of Kentucky to study sustainable agriculture and now works at the UK horticulture research farm in Lexington.

Dengel and other veterans are featured in the article that outlines the program and how it ties into initiatives by Commissioner of Agriculture James Comer to promote jobs in agriculture for veterans.

The Highland Homemakers began the new year in September with the following officers: President Judy Kuchenbecker, vice president Janet Laramore, secretary/treasurer Anne Frank.

This was a busy year. The club was selected as Club of the Year in the county meeting in June. They received $100 and the money was used to buy fleece material. Forty pillows were made to be donated to Operation National Kids Organization for those children going to summer camp.

Maxideen Pruitt was named Homemaker of the Year.

Members also knitted or crocheted caps for cancer patients who had received radiation and lost their hair.

The Holiday Bazaar was held recently and the Homemakers had booths helping with information and purchasing items or eating lunch. The Bazaar was a huge success according to members.

Donations of $50 were made to the Green County Elementary School and Green County Primary School to help with Christmas gifts.

The members last met Nov. 19 at the Extension office to welcome new members Joe and Nancy Horton. Helen Clark also joined the club. Leslie Woolen is a possible prospect.

The next meeting will be Tuesday, Dec. 17 at 10:30 a.m. A potluck lunch will be served and all members are asked to donate $5 instead of exchanging gifts. The money will go to the local food bank.
